Excerpt: .hour; The burdened soul shall own its healing power; And when the angels beckon from the sky, Its beams alone can cheer the closing eye. By this conquer. 1855 ALL ARE HERE. THE flowers have come, the grass creeps up the hills, And paints the valleys with their living green 5 While dawning day each opening blossom fills With sacred dew that night has wept unseen. The maiden to her garden goes this morn, And finds the buds that bloom in sweet surprise; EPITAPH. Lo here, where once her bordered plot was shorn, Her well-remembered plants in beauty rise. Now all are here, though some on withered stems Did lowly bow their drooping heads and die; How meekly now they wear their diadems And greet the sunlight with rejoicing eye! And as she names the blossoms as they ope, And spread their new-born beauty to...
